

News EXCLUSIVE: We uncover the greatest mystery in aviation history

An airline charter flight that left New York in 1955 with 57 passengers and crew astonishingly landed at an international airport in March of this year, witnesses say.

Tapes of the pilot's conversation with the control tower provide compelling evidence that the mind-twisting drama took place.

But the clincher is the recovery of a calendar from 1955, which the horrified pilot dropped onto the modern airport's runway seconds before his 40-year-old DC-4 took off and vanished in the sky above Caracas, Venezuela.

"I saw the aircraft, I heard the pilot, I held the center console — and I still can't believe it," said Juan de la Corte, the traffic controller who witnessed the entire spectacle from the tower at the airport in Caracas.

"I can't believe it, but I have to. And there is no high-tech explanation that makes any sense at all. Those people that plane thought they were landing — and living — in 1955."

Air traffic control officers said they knew something was very strange when the propeller-driven airplane appeared over the airport but didn't show up on radar.

"We could see it with our eyes, but not on our instruments," said one officer, who requested anonymity.

When asked for identification, the pilot radioed back, "Are you sure? What the hell is going on?" He sounded very confused, but he finally identified the craft as charter flight 914 out of New York, bound for Miami with 57 passengers.

The source said a hush came over the control room — because Miami is 1,200 miles from Caracas.

"I took the mike and said, 'Welcome to Caracas, Venezuela, South America. Are you ready? Are you ready?'" There was no response, so I said, 'I heard him say to his copilot, 'Jesus Christ, a woman crying hysterically.

approached the plane," said the controller, "the pilot shouted: 'No! Get away. We're getting out of here!'"

Members of the crew reported seeing the faces of terrified passengers pressed against the windows. They said the pilot himself opened his cockpit window and tried to see them.
